The Pneumatic Tire. In a paper presented lately by A. J. lichelin to the French Society of Civil Engineers the author gives a suggestive account of his experiments with the pocumatic tire and the ordinary wheels. The first experiment was made on three days—that is, when the ground was Engagement covered with two inches of snow, also when the snow was melting and then when the ground was muddy. The results showed that when the empty carriage moved at a walk through the snow, the draft or pull required to move it was 35.9 pounds with iron wheels and only 25.2 pounds with pneumatic wheels. While moving at a trot with a load of 660 pounds, the pull was 68.6 pounds and 39, 5 pounds respectively. In the mud, under the same conditions of load and speed, the pulls were 35, 2 and 50.7 pounds for the iron wheel and 23.1 and 21.2 pounds for the pneumatic tire. Other tests consisted of pulls of varying speeds over macadam, paved and or linary roads, in all of these the pneumatic tire showing a saving in pulling power of from 30 to nearly 50 per cent. The main feature of interest in Miche and was first induced to do so by a lin's experiments consisted, of course, in the fact that the actual amount of rather hundrons incident which happened here. There were three very power required to pull a carriage equipped with pneumatic tires was so much less than when ordinary wheels were
